(Correspondence of The Bloomfield Record.) WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 3, 1874. While I am writing this letter the election returns are coming in, but nothing is known as to the result-whether it will be a Republican or Democratic victory. As the people are the parties interested, of course it rests with them which to chose from, to have in power. In any event this election will be a lesson to the Republicans for the future in many ways, -namely, to look more carefully to the wants of the people, and give more general satisfaction in their legislation. If the Democrats are victorious, their victory will be but short-lived, for in their exultation, there will be more "Knockdowns" and "carrying-out" than will be pleasant. Following their success, there will be the same lawlessness as was witnessed when Andrew Johnson left the Republican party, and came out square for the Demo-

The Harrington Safe Burglary case has had one week of considerable labor, and brought to light an array of testimony by the Government, sufficient to stagger the incredulity of the most ardent apologists of crime. While not exactly implicating anyone outside of those indicted, yet it seems to reach and point, in most unmistakable language, to more officials than any indictment of crime has ever produced in this country before. In addition, it brings to light corruptions connected with the Secret Service Division of the Government without a parallel. Besides the conviction of there conspirators in public estimation (no matter what the verdict of the jury may be) it will show the American people to what extremes we were reduced in order to ar-

No blacker page of history could possibly be written than what is developed in this trial. What must be all the secrets of this Division, if what has been shown is "small part" of its workings. The most impartial court in the country would find it a hard matter to arrive at any equitable conclusion with testimony of men who unblashingly swear that their profession not only involves perjury, but the very crime they are employed to detect and arrest.

Haves and Ziruth, in their evidence, corroborate each other in all the particulars of getting acquainted with the memorialists and the manner they were moving and making connections, under orders of Whitley and Nettleship. Telegrams and letters are produced corroborating their statements. Hayes and Ziruth, while working under Nettleship's orders, had parties "shadowing" them, to prove where they went and who they met, for the reason, they state, they knew who they had to deal with. Hayes had a "shadow"-a friend following him, when he visited Nettleship's house on Pennsylvania Ave. in Newark, and it is proven where Nettleship gave several instalments of money to both Ziruth and Hayer to employ burglars, and to make arrangements to commit this burglary and charge it on a respectable citizen.

They meet here in Washington having previously met in New York and got instructions how to connect, and then introduce themselves to some of the memorialists for the purpose of knowing Mr. Columbus Alexander. The memorialists did not believe the books of Jno. O. Evans, a prominent contractor, were genuine, in other words, believed Evans had manufactured books to show the Committee in Congress, stomach, sick headache, habitual costiveand at this time these conspirators approached Mr. Alexander and said they had the duction of them, which was refused, but they were told the expense of bringwhere the burglars, on the pretense of speaking to Harrington of counterfeit money, walked into Harrington's office, and examined the safe. The latter thought it was bungingly done, and wanted to know "what kind of men they had in the secret service." The burglar was hired for $1000, and it was the plan for this paid man to be as "tonics," "renevators," &c., produce this arrested, the other one (two working) was disastrous effect, and should be rejected.

Beginning on the northeasterly side of the old road leading to Bloomfield at the southwesterly corner of land belonging to Peter Garvey; thence running along his to have sneaked out the back way of the building, but Maj. Richards, the Chief of Police, blocked that part of the programme by stationing officers at the rear, so both burglars had to come out the front way, and one was to disappear the best he could.

It seems Maj. Richards, unknown by others, had received information of this conspiracy several days prior to the committal of the burglary, and knew how far to go, and when to "break up the little correspondence, how one burglar escaped, about, for that as $2,500,000 was to be distributed inch to the place of beginning; containing twelve acres and the other was followed by half a dozen men, who were constantly close by him; how this burglar was so self-possessed that he trudged along with his bag of plunder, with no fear or uneasiness. He was arrested when at Mr. Alexander's door, and lodged in jail, and finally unlawfully released by Harrington, and has never been seen since. He had a lawyer named Somerville of New York, who had a bondsman named Schlittenhart, but we hear nothing of prisoner or the bondsman. Somerville appeared as a new character, at Benton's rebeared as a new character, at Benton's release, but by the evidence, it is shown he was Whitley's and Nettleship's handy-man to "fix up" affidavits to be sworn to promistic cuously, as it suited these gentlemen. It is further proved that Harrington and Somerville met at the Continental Hotel in Philadelphia,—the register is produced to prove adelphia, -the register is produced to prove tion must be.

Gustav Ziruth tells a straight and inter- done promptly. Thos. E. BRANCETE, esting story, how Nettleship employed him and paid him, and finally how certain New Jersey officials, in the interest of Nettleship, purchased tickets to send him to Europe. He graphically tells how "Billy Gulld" of Newark (whoever he is) and others were the mediums through whom he "bled" Nettleship, (and how he wished he had "bled" him more). They pay him to go away and he travels in the West, to Washington, to Canada, and like a bad penny, returns to Newark, to worry Nettleship. Then, as a last resort, they try to ship him to Europe, promising $500 for expenses, $1000 pocket money, and $100 a month to his family. To make certain that he is off, they employ a tug, and accompany the steamer out of New York harbor, and as they leave him and go down one side of the steamer, "Gus" sees another tug on the other, and steps aboard of that returns here to Washington, and reports to Mr. Riddle, the presecuting officer of the Government. Hayes developments were alarming, and finding he was telling the truth, and his whole manner carrying conviction with his statements, the counsel for the defense tried to worry him into making some false statements. The Court came to his rescue, but he was abundantly able to take care of himself.

Nettleship, who lives on Pennsylvania evenue, in Newark, is still missing. This don't look like innocence.

The office of the District Attorney is used as headquarters for all interested in the defense. The whole influence that this officer of the government can exert, in the court room or out of it, seems to be thrown in favor of the accused. And some of the witnesses of the defense are a fine lot. A paper here suggests that the police force be doubled while they are in town.

Mr. Alexander testifies substantially up on the subjects touched by Hayes and Ziruth, and corroborates portions of their statements. He says after three interviews with these conspirators he became suspicious and thought there was a job, and the night of the burglary "did not hear the bell, nor his family, very providentially for him and others."

Doubts are entertained of the guilty parties being punished—of the indicted parties—as everybody of ordinary common sense knows that the power behind Col. Whitley and his associates is guilty. Who and what is this power, that can shield and protect these agents of its bidding? That is
